World-renowned architect Mies van der Rohe fully established his career in Chicago after emigrating from Germany, where he served as a director at the ground-breaking Bauhaus school of architecture and design in the pre-World War II era. Establishing himself in Chicago, he built a practice that resulted in a number of Chicago commissions, including the buildings at 900-910 N Lake Shore Drive. A master of proportions and a proponent of "less is more", the timeless nature of his architecture continues to place Mies as one of the world's pre-eminent 20th century architects.
